AN ADMIRED GERMAN ACTRESS. One Hundredth Anniversary of Amelia Haizinger's Birth.

A notable event in the history of the German theatre was celebrated recently. It was the one hundredth anniversary of the birth ' Amalie Haizinger, who was through three generations of her countrymen the most adaired actress of her time. She was famous first as an ingenue, later became a leading actress and fluxly knew almost the greatest triumphs of her career as a comic old woman. she was born in 1800, and one of the most totable episodes of her earlier career took the ein Leipsic during the early 20s. There on of the ambassadors, who was a playwright at the Lelpsic Theatre and a poet of alent, not only wrote glowingly of her youthful talents, but instituted for her an Order of he Rose, of which she was named the queen, and as a greater evidence of his fascination, ersuaded the nightwatchman, instead of callis the usual cry, to intone one night a parody f his call which extolled the beauty of the

to his call which extolled the beauty of the roing actress.
Contemporary records show that no other voman of the time exercised such an influence of the affections of the people, and few women since that day have aroused such earnest devotion in the hearts of their admirers. One hears rarely in these days of the demonstrations that the singers and actors of old used to arouse. We are calm now under nearly all demonstrations of stage art. Horses are no longer taken from carriages while actresses if prima donnas are dragged homeward by duiting crowds. That is not because there is no longer provocation for such demonstration. But a practical age has made the public more self-conscious, and less likely to be moved. In the days of Amalie Haizinger, the mood of the public was different, and its particular favor went out to her through a bringer time than almost any other stage favorite ever enjoyed.

the ever enjoyed. She was born at Carlsruhe in 1800 and died She was born at Carlsruhe in 1800 and died at Vienna eighty-four years later. In the Grand Ducal Theatre, in the capital of Baden, she made her debut as Oberon, in the opera of the same name, written by Paul Wrantzy, who had been a member of the Esterhazy Orthestra under Haydn. The success of this appearance determined the career of the company at the court theatre. At the age of 18 she married the leading sentimental actor of the company. Subsequently he committed sidede and left her a widow with two small children. One of these became an actress, but left the stage early in life to marry an Austrian nobleman.

But it was not to be expected that the most admired woman of her time in Germany would long remain a widow. She soon married Anton van success in Paris and London, as well as in tery German speaking company. Although the bushand had been engaged for life at the attribe Theatre, the two went to Vienna, where for vears Amalie was the idol of the public iter inbilee celebrations while at the Hofburg were the most notable functions that any German across hed ever enjoyed. Her fiftieth a universary as an actress was celebrated in Vienna in 1860, when the Emperor Franz Josef accorated her with the golden medal of art and science, and costly jewels were sent by the following that this celebration was at hand and asked hose who wished to express their admiration for the actress to send merely cards of congratulation. Hundreds of these were received and at a banquet were given to her by a leading Vienna actor dressed as a postman. bleman.

lic was made as a figure in some tableaux given for a charitable purpose. Such a period of adulation for an actress had never been known before in any German city, and to this day, Amalle Haizinger is remembered as the woman who held the affections of the German public longer than any other. The United States differ from European towns in this particular. Here the popularity of an actor declines with every year of his career after a certain age has been reached. One instance of this was noticed not long ago in a city theatre. "My heavens," said a man who is seen frequently at the theatres, "how young Miss X looks, and she must be 45 if she's a day. I saw her twenty years ago." As a matter of fact, the actress had first appeared twelve years before at the age of 20. She was 32 at the time this theatregoer began to complain of her age. But that we have the complain of her age. But that we have the company the complaint of her age. goer began to complain of her age. But that was to be expected in New York, where the public tires quickly of its favorites and always demands new faces.

TALKING OF VOWEL SOUNDS. A Scotchman's Proof of the Superiority of His Language in That Respect.

From the Mexican Herald. A few days ago I was dining in one of the restaurants of the city. At a table next to me sat a party consisting of a Frenchman, a German, an Italian, a couple of Mexicans and a Scotchman. The conversation turned upon the comparative beauty of languages. Each one of the party contended that his own lanone of the party contended that his own language was the superior of all others. The German based his contention upon the wonderful strength and self-sufficiency of the German language and the virile character of its thoughts and its literature. The Frenchman claimed that the French language not only had no superior, but no equal in its ability to express all thoughts accurately and with true beauty and depth of feeling.

The Italian and the Mexicans each claimed that his language was possessed of one beauty.

and depth of feeling.

The Italian and the Mexicans each claimed that his language was possessed of one beauty to which no other language could lay claim, the beauty of sonorous sound. The battlewaxed hot between these two, the Mexican maintaining that Spanish had nore true full vowel sounds than any other living language.

Finally both appealed the matter to the Scotchman, who had, contrary to the chacteristics of his race, not taken any part in the discussion, good, bad or indifferent.

Saundy scratched his head for a moment, as though reflecting deeply; then he said: "Ah, weel, a dinna ken, but what 'yee'll be baith richt, for ye ocht to ken yer aine langwidge weel. But when it cooms to takin' o' vowel soons a dinna ken ony langwidge that ken coom oop to thae Scotch. A'll jist give ye a wee story that illustriates wha' a wad tell ye.

"A man ance went into a store in Dunkirk, an' catched a piece o' cloth atween his fingers an' his thumb an' he said to the storekeeper.

"Oo?"

"And the storekeeper said: 'Ay, oo.'

an' his thumb an' he said to the storekeeper.

"Oo?' And the storekeeper said: 'Ay, oo.'

"Aw oo?' said the man.

"Ay, aw oo,' answered the storekeeper.

"Ay a oo?' asked the mans

"Ay, aw a oo,' said the storekeeper.

"There's a complete business transaction carried on wi'out the use o' a single consonant soon. A dinna ken if either Italian or Spanish or any ither langwidge can equal thot.

The above story, as told by the Scotchman, is here given with the representation of the sounds of the words, in preference to the Scotch spelling, which might not be familiar to some of the readers of the Herald. The translation of the conversation which took place between the merchant and his customer is as follows:

"Wool [oo]?

"Yes, wool [ay, oo].

"All wool [aw oo]?"

"Yes, all wool [aw ao]?"

"Yes, all one wool, [ay, aw aoo]."

A Great Lot of Boys' Washable Suits. A Phenomenal Half-Price Sale, 50c., 75c. and $1.00 Each.

Brackets to hang It is far from exaggeration to say that this is the very best offer of Boys' Washable Suits made this season, or, in fact, any season. The suits themselves are good enough and nice enough for anybody and low enough in price to attract the most economical buyer. We bought the entire stock of one of the very best makers—surplus stock, late in the season, the only reason for the sacrifice. They are Sailor Blouse Suits—almost a hundred different kinds, the best kinds, too, to choose from, and suits that have never been shown in Brooklyn before. The fabrics are white duck, pique, striped duck, Galatea and linen crash; all beautifully trimmed with braids and embroidery, or cloths in contrasting colors. Plenty of sizes in all styles to fit boys 3 to 10 years, which is the state of the divided into three lots, viz.: 429 suits at 50c. 633 suits at 75c. 840 suits at $1.00.
